The weather continues to look good this weekend, so we are going to plan on having Eucharist in the church as usual. Just a reminder, we do not have heat in the building, so if you are someone who gets cold, please dress appropriately. The first contractor that was tapped to manufacture our outdoor railings was not able to produce them. Another contractor has been assigned. We are hoping to have them in a couple of weeks. Until they arrive, we will still be using the main door (Door 1) and north door (Door 2) for entrance and exits. You will notice that most of a new path has been constructed on the outside of the building connecting the south and north doors. The rest will be completed when the front stairs and roof are done.

This Sunday will be celebrated as the Feast of St. Matthew. Matthew was an evangelist and a disciple of Jesus. While most of the early disciples were working people like fisherman and carpenters, Matthew was middle class and one of the despised tax collectors. Matthew's very life is a testament to the openness of the Gospel. He also reveals the Gospel's moral insistence that we should not be focusing on an occupation being bad or good but doing the job with integrity. Even a tax collector can be honest and fair.

Blessings,
Marc
